LIZARD QUEEN

Another page, another Target designer collaboration. Devi Kroell—a photogenic young jet-setter whose cult bags and accessories are frequently made of some of the most high-end reptile hides on earth—has partnered with the megabrand for a range of totes and clutches in faux versions of Kroell's signature metallic scales. They're very Ziggy Stardust—and they'll free up your hard-earned cash for a summer music festival pass. LEAH APPLEBAUM

public parker

She may have made Manolos a household name, but what you might not know about Sarah Jessica Parker is that she grew up with seven brothers and sisters, and thus with a fashion philosophy more hand-me-down than downtown chic. Now, following the lead of seemingly every other style icon, Parker has created a fashion collection, Bitten—this time, it's for discount apparel megastore Steve & Barry's—with the tag line, "Fashion isn't a luxury, it's a right." Designed to reflect Parker's own wardrobe, the nearly 500 pieces that comprise Bitten—from knit tops and cashmere sweaters to jeans, sleepwear, swimwear, shoes, bags, and belts—are all under $20. Sure, shopping for your Saturday night outfit a couple of aisles over from Coors sweatshirts and WWE jackets might not seem very Sex and the City, but we think Carrie Bradshaw would get a kick out of it. WELL HEELED

"I've never gone into Gucci and bought a pair of shoes at full price," says Hilary Rosenman, which is undoubtedly a statement that most of us can second. Rosenman, a New Yorker who grew up with fellow fashion entrepreneurs Charlotte Ronson and NYLO's Dani Stahl ("I worked with Charlotte when we were still in her basement, packing up boxes to send to Scoop"), is one half of Madison Harding, a fledgling shoe line she started with business partner Barri Buden because, she says, "There was just a huge lack of cool-looking shoes that we could afford." Inspired by their shared love of vintage, the designers crafted a debut collection of canvas wedges, knotted-rope and crocheted heels, and woven metallic flat sandals, all priced around $200. Sure, they're not thrift-store prices, but how many thrift-store shoes look this cute and come in your size? KATE WILLIAMS
